Performing an elimination diet trial is a crucial step in the diagnostic workup of pets with non-seasonal pruritus. One of the most common comments we hear from owners of allergic pets is their desire to 'get to the root cause' of their pet's itching, but this cannot be done without a proper diet trial.

In this webcast, Dr. O'Shaughnessy-Hunter will go through a step-by-step guide on how to perform successful diet trials as well as discuss common pitfalls and roadblocks that can lead to their downfall, and tips on how to overcome them.

Join us to gain practical insight that will help you design and manage successful elimination diet trials.

Laura O'Shaughnessy-Hunter

BSc, DVM, MSc, Dipl. ACVD

Dr. O'Shaughnessy-Hunter graduated from the Ontario Veterinary College in 2014. After three years in general practice, she completed a rotating internship at the Atlantic Veterinary College, followed by a three-year dermatology residency at the Veterinary Allergy Dermatology & Ear Referral Clinic (VADER) near Guelph, Ontario. She became a Diplomate of the American College of Veterinary Dermatology in 2021 and continues to practise at VADER. Dr. O'Shaughnessy-Hunter is passionate about educating clients and fellow veterinary team members on all aspects of veterinary dermatology to help improve the quality of life of pets with skin disease. In her spare time, she enjoys spending time with her husband and two young children, and hiking with her Brittany Spaniel and Aussiedoodle.
